

NuGenesis Farm, Inc., located in Pewaukee, is a non-profit organization working to prevent disease through education, sustainable organic agriculture, and research. Its vision is that NuGenesis Farm will be a model for global communities to incorporate “food as medicine” and ultimately prevent disease.

WaterStone Bank employees and family members gathered on Saturday, July 16, 2011 to support NuGenesis Farm with manual labor. Volunteers spent the afternoon weeding beet, cantaloupe and watermelon rows, along with staking droopy tomato plants. Brian, the farm manager, thanked WaterStone volunteers for their efforts stating, “The impact you just made was huge.” Though it was hard work, the volunteers had a wonderful time!

NuGenesis Farm is a laboratory in the field teaching communities how specific organic foods can prevent disease to improve public health, conducting research to support this, teaching communities how to grow these foods and making them widely available so individuals can learn how to incorporate them into their daily lives.

To learn more about NuGenesis Farm, visit their Web site:
<http://nugenesisfarm.org/>

